ND Scenic Byway & Backway Signs

These signs are installed along all designated North Dakota Scenic Byways & Backways. North Dakota has seven byways and three backways.

America's Byways Identification Signs

These signs are installed along state designated byways that have also earned National Scenic Byway designation. The signs are used in lieu of the state signs. North Dakota has two nationally designated byways – the Sheyenne River Valley National Scenic Byway and the Standing Rock National Native American Scenic Byway.

North Dakota is full of breathtaking views, uninhabited land, extraordinary wildlife, country charm, rich culture and history, and an abundance of outdoor recreational opportunities.

What are Scenic Byways and Backways?
To be considered a scenic byway or backway, a road must qualify under one of the following categories:

- Scenic
- Natural
- Historic
- Cultural
- Archaeological
- Recreational

The road should also meet amenity considerations such as gas, food, lodging and proximity to other interesting attractions. To be a byway, the road must have an all-weather surface suitable for automobile travel. A road designated as a backway means that the road may be unsuitable for large recreational vehicles or the road may have safety or comfort concerns.

This guide contains information and insight into the ten distinct byways and backways located throughout North Dakota. You will find maps, directions, amenities, opportunities, and points of interest. The guide will leave you with a new appreciation for North Dakota and a desire to explore more.

NATIONAL SCENIC BYWAY

STANDING ROCK NATIONAL NATIVE AMERICAN

TATANKA IYOTAKE
“SITTING BULL”
1831-1890

A Revered Leader, Chief, Husband, and Father, Loyal to his People.

Tatanka Iyotake, a Hunkpapa Lakota was born near Many Caches on the Grand River in South Dakota. At the age of 14 he counted his first “coup” and was given the name Tatanka Iyotake “Sitting Bull”. He grew up to be a prominent warrior and leader of the Teton Lakota.

In the summer of 1876 he had a vision of a great victory over white soldiers. That vision was fulfilled when Tatanka Iyotake, along with Crazy Horse, Gall and hundreds of Lakota and Cheyenne warriors defeated General George Armstrong Custer’s 7th Cavalry at the Battle of Greasy Grass (Battle of Little Bighorn).

Tatanka Iyotake was killed by Tribal police at his home near Grand River on December 15, 1890. Tribal police were acting on orders to bring him into the agency in order to quell the Ghost Dance (a ceremonial dance they believed would bring back the old ways of life).

His grave had been destroyed and has since been disinterred in 1953 at the request of four of his sons.

History comes alive at the Standing Rock National Native American Scenic Byway. Learn about some of the great historic figures who have been connected to this area including Sitting Bull; Meriwether Lewis, William Clark and their guide Sakakawea; and famous mountain men such as Jim Bridger and Jedediah Smith. Not only is this byway full of rich culture, intriguing history, and symbolism, but it is also a scenic area with stunning views of the Missouri River and vast wildlife.

LOCATION:

Begins at the Cannonball River and continues south along Highways 1806 and 24 to the South Dakota state line. [35 miles]
